TWO IMPERTS TO ONE SPIRIDON. Complainant's Revised Version of the Brie-

The case of Alexander Imbert and his wife, charged with assaulting Raphael Spiridon of 17 East Seventeenth street on Thursday night, came up in Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning. Both Imbert and Spiridon are dealers in paintings and bric a brac, the former at West Tairty-first street and the latter in Irving place near Fourteenth street. The assault is alleged to have been committed in Spiridon's lodgings.

Raphael Spiridon's brother, Lodovico, pre sented a certificate from Dr. G. Bettini di Moiso that Raphael had sustained injuries which made it impossible for him to leave his bed. Imbert's counsel asked that the case be adjourned until Jan. 31. The request was granted, and Imbert and the woman were allowed to go under their bond for $5,000.

According to the story told yesterday by Logovico Spiridon, it was Mrs. Imbert, not Imbert, who rolled down stairs in the fight with his brother. Lodovico says that when Imbert and the weman reached 17 East Seventeenth street on Thursday night, he and his brother were dining in the rear dining room. Imbert were dining in the rear dining room. Imbert told Raphael that he wished to talk with him privately. Raphael invited both the Imberts up to his private parlor on the first floor. When they reached there imbert said:

"Spiridon, you have been teling people that I am hard up, that I don't pay my debts. You have also said insuiting things about my wife. What do you mean by such stories?

"Well," replied Spiridon, "If I said you are hard up and don't pay your bills, what of it? Is it not so? If you are not hard up, why don't you pay me what you owe me?"

After that Imbert continued to berate Spiridon, and Spiridon ordered both the man and woman out of the room. Then Imbert hit Spiridon ever the head with a cane. As Spiridon staggered back the woman jumped at him, as Lodovico asserts, caught Raphael's nose in her left hand, and scratched his face with her right. In trying to defend himself Raphael clinched with the woman, and they fell, Imbert hitting Spiridon's head and shoulders with the cane whenever he got a chance, until Spiridon and the woman finally rolled down stairs. Imbert, Lodovico says, was right behind them, using his cane on the man whenever opportunity offered. At the foot of the stairs the people in the restaurant interfered and hustled Imbert and the woman into the street.

Individual Communion Cups, Individual communion cups of silver were yesterday introduced in the Ross Street Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. There are 360, and that church is the first of its denomination in ooklyn to use them.

BUNGLING THE BOND ISSUE.

The successive amendments and additions which the Administration has made to its plan for selling bonds to replenish the Treasury gold reserve, prove, beyond question, that its circular of a forinight ago, inviting bids for the bonds, was issued upon the spur of the moment, merely to silence the popular condemnation of the reported bargain with the Morgan syndicate, and without any expectation that it would accomplish its ostensible purpose. To this circular have been added, first, instructions to bidders, telling them just how to make their bids; next, a placarding of its contents in Post Offices; next, an appeal to the national banks to aid in getting the bonds taken, and, finally, a modification of the terms of sale, which allows successful bidders four months instead of six weeks during which to complete their payments.

The original intention of the Administration was, clearly, to buy gold coin with the bonds, under the act of 1862, now section 3,700 of the United States Revised Statutes. This was the basis upon which Mr. Morgan invited subscrip-tions to his syndicate, and that it was unchanged as late as the Saturday before the circular was issued offering the bonds for public competition, his letter of that day to the President demonstrates. The next day the plan was abandoned and an issue of bonds under the Resumption act of 1875 was adopted in its stead. The change was one of form only, since, whether gold is bought with bonds or bonds sold for gold, the result is exactly the same; but it served to show the people that the reported bargain with the syndicate did not exist, and it thus relieved the Administration of the odium which the credence given to the making of such a bargain was bringing upon it.

Comparing the President's letter to Senator Caffery of Jan. 5 with Mr. Morgan's announcement of the dissolution of his syndicate, made Jan. 14, it will be seen that the two do not contradict one another in matters of fact. Mr. Morgan says, indeed, that he was "invited to dent says that "no banker, financier, nor any other human being has been invited to Washington," but the President adds, " for the purpose of arranging in any way or manner for the disposition of bonds to meet the present or future needs of the gold reserve." Mr. Morgan confirms the President's subsequent assertion that no such arrangement was made, nor any assurance given of such a disposal of the bonds and he says that he formed his syndicate only to be ready to act promptly whenever the occasion for iction arrived. The President, in turn, confirms Mr. Morgan's assertion that he was invited to Washington for a conference of some kind, by saving in his letter to Senator Caffery, that those charged with the responsibility of maintaining the gold reserve, so far as legislation renders it possible, have anxiously conferred with each other, and, as occasion permitted, with those having knowledge of fluancial affairs and present monetary conditions," Mr. Morgan further says that one of his conclusions, as a result of this conference, was, "that the Executive department would prefer, if possible, to secure $200,000,000 in gold in order to avoid any probable necessity for a similar negotiation before the meeting of Congress in 1897." the President partially confirms by adding to his words just above quoted the information that the conference was upon "the best and nost favorable means of selling bonds for gold." In view of this documentary evidence and of Mr. Morgan's well-known intelligence and bustness ability, it is impossible to resist the conviction that at the conference at Washington on Dec. 28, 1895, the whole matter of the bond ssue was thoroughly discussed, and that Mr. Morgan was assured by some one whom he supposed had authority to speak for the Administion, that the issue would be made under section 3,700 of the Revised Statutes, that the amount about the basis of the contract of Feb. 8, 1895," would have been that of a lunatic who accepts his fanciful visions for actualities. Having decided to abandon the plan substantially agreed upon with Mr. Morgan, and adopted that of selling the bonds for gold under the provisions of the Resumption act, the Adminis-tration ought to have consulted, as it did at first, "with those having knowledge of financial affairs" as to the best mode of executing it. This it most assuredly neglected to do. It merely copied, with the necessary changes, the more residence, 25 nowery.

> Whether, with all its modifications and improvements, the offer of the Government will bring out satisfactory bids for the whole or even a large part of the $100,000,000, is not by any means so certain as many people seem to think it is. Mr. Morgan, his friends are glad to see, announces his readiness to " Join with those prepared to take any amount that may not be obligation to bid a high price for the undesired remnant, and the total result may yet vindicate great deal is said about the millions that cormind. frequent occasion to remark, the officers of banks, who, with a few exceptions, profess the greatest zeal for the maintenance of gold payments, are actually, in this emergency, working for their suspension. Carried away with the | Of Ch. | C idea of protecting the Treasury reserve, they discourage by every means short of positive refusal the payment of legal tenders to their depositors, and drive those of them who destre gold, but who dislike, in order to procure it, to quarrel with institutions of whom they may need to ask favors, into selling their checks to brokers at a discount. The result is that gold is no longer current money, but is bought and sold as merchandise, and that the banks have unintentionally, of course, brought about, to a certoin extent, a virtual suspension of gold pay ments. The Comptroller of the Currency, too, who zealously advocates the retirement of the legal tenders, connives by his inaction at this breach of bank obligations, although its inevitable tendency is to obstruct the procurement by the Treasury of the means of doing Considerable apprehension is noticeable, in financial circles, at the prospect of the monetary stringency which, it is beginning to be understood, must follow the absorption by the Treasury of the $100,000,000 and more which it is going to receive for the new bonds. The modification of the terms of payment, making the installments of it smaller and spreading them over a longer period of time, is intended to allay this feeling, but its palliating effect will not be great. Wall Street has a habit of discounting the future, and a result which is certain to take place at the end of four months has the same influence on the money market now that it would have if it were going to happen to-morrow. Already, as their successive weekly statements she four banks are contracting their loans and increasing their reserves. in anticipation of the demands which will be made upor them when the first installment of $20,000,000 upon the bonds will fall due, and they are evi-men, especially that portion of them in this region who have been clamoring for the retirement and cancellation of the legal tender notes.

ing of the new loan will entail. Allowing a probable disbursement, for current expenses the next four months, of $20,000,000 out of the $100,000,000 and upward of the proceeds of the loan, there will be a locking up in the Treasury of $80,000,000 at least. This will not only diminish the volume of money in circulation by over $80,000,000, but it will, by something like four times its amount, reduce the ability of the banks to accommodate borrowers. The vacuum may be filled, and ought to be filled to some extent, by gold imported from Europe, but it is an indispensable condition of this importation that the interest of money here should for a sufficiently long period remain high enough to attract hither foreign capital. Not the least of the blunders which have been made in regard to the new bond issue has been the dissemination of the fallacy that the Treasury reserve can be replenished and the maintenance of gold payments assured, without reducing the volume of bank loans. Neither refusing payment in legal tenders, nor importations of gold to be exported again as soon as it has served its temporary purpose, nor extending the period of payment for the bonds, nor the enlargement of bank circulation, will avail to prevent it. It will be abitter but a beneficial dose to swallow, and we must take it without making wry faces. MATTHEW MARSHALL.

INSURE YOUR TITLE,

if you offer lots for sale. From the Brooklyn Engle, March 4, 1895, " REAL ESTATE MARKET.

" For a number of years past it has grown to be almost a general practice that in all sales of real estate where a large number of parcels are sold at the same time, particularly proved lots or other parcels where the consideration is small, to furnish to each purchaser without additional expense a policy of title insurance. So general has this practice become that it is invariably expected that such a policy will be furnished at every sale where any large amount of property is offered. In other words, the system of selling property with titles guarasteed by a reputable and responsible insurance company is one which commends itself to the best judgment of those most experienced in
